Dear Parents, Guardians and Caregivers,

When we consider the skills and habits of mind that our children must develop, resilience is an attribute which rises to the top of the list. As we begin to prepare children so that ultimately they will be ready for college and career, resilience has been heralded as an essential life skill. So how then do we as parents and educators help our students?

Research shows that we all can develop resilience, and we can help our children develop it as well. It involves behaviors, thoughts and actions that can be learned over time. In essence, through our actions and reactions, we can build and hone this attribute.

The following are tips to building resilience.

1. Make connections with your child.
 - Teach your child how to make friends, including the skill of empathy, or feeling another's pain. Encourage your child to be a friend in order to get friends. Build a strong family network to support your child through his or her inevitable disappointments and hurts.
2. Help your child by having him or her help others
 - Children who may feel helpless can be empowered by helping others. Engage your child in age-appropriate volunteer work, or ask for assistance yourself with some task that he or she can master.
3. Maintain a daily routine
 - Sticking to a routine can be comforting to children, especially younger children who crave structure in their lives. Encourage your child to develop his or her own routines.
4. Take a break
 - While it is important to stick to routines, endlessly worrying can be counterproductive. Teach your child how to focus on something besides what's worrying him/her. Be aware of what your child is exposed to that can be troubling, whether it be news, the internet or overheard conversations, and make sure your child takes a break from those things if they trouble him/her.
5. Teach your child self-care
 - Make yourself a good example, and teach your child the importance of making time to eat properly, exercise and rest. Make sure your child has time to have fun, and make sure that your child hasn't scheduled every moment of his or her life with no "down time" to relax. Caring for oneself and even having fun

Will help your child stay balanced and better deal with stressful times.

6. Move toward your goals.

- Teach your child to set reasonable goals and then to move toward them one step at a time. Moving toward that goal — even if it's a tiny step — and receiving praise for doing so will focus your child on what he or she has accomplished rather than on what hasn't been accomplished, and can help build the resilience to move forward in the face of challenges.

7. Nurture a positive self-view.

- Help your child remember ways that he or she has successfully handled hardships in the past and then help him understand that these past challenges help him build the strength to handle future challenges. Help your child learn to trust himself to solve problems and make appropriate decisions. Teach your child to see the humor in life, and the ability to laugh at one's self.

8. Keep things in perspective and maintain a hopeful outlook.

- Even when your child is facing very painful events, help him look at the situation in a broader context and keep a long-term perspective. Although your child may be too young to consider a long-term look on his own, help him or her see that there is a future beyond the current situation and that the future can be good. An optimistic and positive outlook enables your child to see the good things in life and keep going even in the hardest times.

9. Look for opportunities for self-discovery.

- Tough times are often the times when children learn the most about themselves. Help your child take a look at how whatever he is facing can teach him "what he is made of."

10. Accept that change is part of living.

- Change often can be scary for children and teens. Help your child see that change is part of life and new goals can replace goals that have become unattainable.

Very truly yours.

Johnson School Makerspace

Donations Needed

We are in the process of creating a “makerspace” at Johnson School. What is a makerspace? A makerspace is an area that allows for creativity and innovation to occur so that students can engage in learning experiences that allow them to make real-life connections. It is an environment where children can tinker, design and create together. Students will have the opportunity to to make real things and re-use everyday materials in exciting ways.

With spring right around the corner this may be a good time for some cleaning out. We are looking for used items that could be repurposed by students. Do you have any old broken small electronics that students could take apart? Do you have any used materials like plastic or cardboard filling up your recycle bin? Do you have broken toys or games missing pieces? Please drop donations off to the bin labeled MAKERSPACE in the lobby.

Any questions? Please contact Alana Weinberg at weinberga@bethel.k12.ct.us or Jen Torpey at Torpeyj@bethel.k12.ct.us
